

That the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved your time at home. My family time is no longer interrupted. Because of Indiana's Telephone Privacy law, I no longer dread the phone ringing or rush to check caller ID to avoid telemarketing calls. I also think it limits the gains that companys such as Ameritech make off selling our information to telemarketers then turn around and sell us services such as "Privacy Manager".

Indiana's law has been so effective that receive 1-3 telemarketing calls a months rather than every day.

I think it our state has to accept and enforce a lower standard that it will be forced into a serious disservice to the citizens in Indiana. It's amazing how such effort that has been so effective may have to "lower" its standards for a nation. We should be striving for and imitating the things that work and improve the quality of family time!
